COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIP RULES

What we offer:

1. 20% discount for the community that we partner with – we send a special promo code with you. This promo code should be shared with community members (preferably not as publicly available/google searchable information - so that your community members are privileged).
2. Information about your partnership in our social media channels
3. 1 ticket for contest, but the rules should not be 'random'. There should be real contest connected with programming or design or with similar event of the partner. Contest should require both community organizers and community members to be active participants. It's one of the below pool of ideas that we can start from or the partner should propose their own idea. Our proposals for now:
 - best feedback on your event(s)
 - winning some programming contest (best pull request on open source library?)
 - best stack overflow (or similar) response in certain area (in some time period)
 - best alternative design for the event (you can do such contest for an event :))
 - best talk at your event
 - best blog post about programming/design
 - best volunteer contribution to your event(s)
4. logo on our website with link to a partner
last but not least - we can give our community partners one free ticket for the organizers, but by default only if/when the promo code we give is used 5x by their community members (so 5 tickets bought). We can make some exceptions for that rule, but it's case-by-case basis.

What we get:

1. the same :) Sharing a word about us in your Social Media channels, in newsletters, or face-to-face with your community members
2. if applicable - in-person announcement during meet-ups/events, possibly done by one of our organizers
